The bubble, and what you make of it after

TO BEGIN

The bubble, and what you make of it after

On holiday, everything aligns for love: novelty, freedom, time, dreamy scenery. It's the 'bubble' — intense and beautiful, but it can skew judgment.

This guide helps you savor a holiday encounter for what it is, without forcing a future or missing a real bond.

YOUR INTENTION

What you expect (or fear) from a holiday encounter: _____

The bubble effect

Far from routine, with no stress or schedules, you meet at your best: the intensity is real, but partly tied to the context. It can be a true crush... or holiday magic.

Understanding the bubble effect saves you illusions — and disappointments.

Example

Marc was sure he'd found 'the love of his life' by day 3; naming the bubble effect helped him see clearer.

The bubble

What, in the holiday context, amplifies your feelings?

Clear-eyed

Write: 'The intensity is real, but partly tied to the setting.'

Takeaway — Holiday romance is intense — partly thanks to the bubble.

'It's definitely true love'

'We're made for each other', 'I'll never feel this elsewhere', 'I must bet everything now': these thoughts push you to over-value a few days.

Reframing them keeps you grounded without killing the magic.

Example

'If I don't do everything to keep it going, I'll lose them' panicked Sarah, until she chose to savor without forcing.

Spot the carried-away

Note a thought over-valuing the encounter · a calmer version.

Savor without forcing

Write: 'I can savor without betting everything on a few days.'

Takeaway — Savor the encounter without betting everything on a few days.

Truly enjoy the present

A holiday encounter's finest gift is often the moment: let yourself live it fully, without polluting it with anxiety about 'after'. Enjoying the present is already precious.

Whether it lasts or not, what you live now is yours.

Example

By no longer worrying about what's next, Nia had a wonderful holiday — and kept a lovely memory, whatever happened.

The present

How to fully enjoy the moment, without fretting about after?

Mine

Write: 'This moment is mine, whether it lasts or not.'

Takeaway — Fully enjoy the present: this moment is yours.

Deciding, after the bubble

In practice: be honest about your expectations (fling or continuation?), say it simply, and keep the big decision for the return — distance is the real test. Also mind your safety (unfamiliar places, caution).

If the bond is real, it'll survive the return to normal life.

Example

Back home, Karim and the person tested the distance — and knew, then, if it was solid.

My expectations

Are you leaning toward a fling or open to continuation? Say it simply.

The return test

Write: 'The big decision is made after the bubble, not inside it.'

Takeaway — Distance, on return, is the real test of a holiday romance.

Key takeaways

- Holiday romance is intense, partly thanks to the bubble.
- Savor without betting everything on a few days.
- Fully enjoy the present: this moment is yours.
- Be honest about your expectations (fling or continuation?).
- Keep the big decision for the return.
- Distance is the real test; mind your safety.
