BEFORE YOU BEGIN

Understanding union patterns to choose consciously

Hypergamy (partnering 'up' socio-economically), endogamy (within one's group), hypogamy ('down'): these are sociology terms describing partner-choice patterns. None is 'good' or 'bad'.

Understanding them — without judgment — helps you see your own expectations, their origins, and choose a relationship aligned with your values rather than social scripts.

Your intention

The pattern you lean toward (and why, as you see it): _____

The 4 approaches

This guide works your topic through 4 complementary psychology lenses. Read, do the exercises, fill the workbook — at your own pace.

Psychodynamic — understand the root.

CBT — ease the negative thoughts.

Humanistic — reconcile with yourself.

Systemic — act on your environment.

Three union patterns

Hypergamy: choosing a partner of perceived higher social/economic status. Endogamy: within your milieu, culture, community. Hypogamy: with a perceived lower status.

These tendencies are shaped by sought security, status, family and cultural values, attraction, social heritage — often unconsciously.

Example

Sure she 'had to' marry within her milieu, Sarah realized it was a family expectation, not a considered choice. Seeing it restored her freedom.

My pattern

Which do you lean toward (hyper-, endo-, hypogamy)? What passed it to you?

Conscious, not automatic

Write: 'My pattern is a tendency — not an obligation. I can choose.'

→ No pattern is 'good' or 'bad' — what matters is choosing consciously.

Your beliefs about love and money

'I only deserve...', 'money shouldn't matter' (or 'only money matters'), 'I must marry within/outside my milieu': these rigid beliefs steer your choices unawares.

Spotting and softening them restores your freedom to decide.

Example

Sure that 'wanting material security was shameful', Karim wouldn't discuss it. Owning it clarified his choices.

Beliefs journal

Note: a rigid belief about love and money · a more nuanced version.

Soften

Write: 'I can want security AND love — without shame or rigidity.'

→ My beliefs guide my choices — I can question them.

Your real needs, beyond status

Beyond social 'level', what do YOU truly seek: security, shared ambition, common values, respect, attraction, a life project? Status is just one criterion among many.

Clarifying your values prevents confusing 'status' with 'compatibility'.

Example

By listing what truly mattered, Léa saw shared ambition and respect weighed far more than a bank balance alone.

My real needs

Write 3 essential needs in a relationship (beyond social status).

Status vs compatibility

Where might you confuse 'social level' with 'real compatibility'?

→ Real compatibility matters more than status.

Deciding freely

Concretely: spot the pressures (family, milieu, social media), assess real compatibility (values, projects, power balance), and stay lucid about imbalances (financial, social) that call for communication and limits.

Choosing consciously means deciding by YOUR values — not by default.

Example

Rather than follow her circle's expectations, Fatou chose a partner aligned with her values — and finally felt free.

The pressures

What pressure (family, milieu, image) influences your love choices? How to distance it?

My #1 criterion

If you kept only one truly essential criterion, which? _____

→ I choose by my values — not by habit or pressure.

Practical tips & advice

Tips & advice

- The three patterns (hyper-, endo-, hypogamy) are neither good nor bad — what matters is awareness.
- Spot what guides your expectations (security, status, culture, attraction).
- Beware rigid beliefs about money, 'level', deserving.
- Real compatibility (values, projects, respect) outweighs status.
- Watch for family and social pressures.
- A power imbalance (financial, social) calls for lucidity, communication and limits.
