

Rekindling Your Libido

When desire fades: understanding and reawakening your libido

4 psychology approaches · tips · 18+ — by EvaTalk · for women

CONTENTS

Rekindling Your Libido

1. Before you begin
2. The 4 approaches
3. Psychodynamic lens
4. CBT lens
5. Humanistic lens
6. Systemic lens
7. Tips & advice
8. Your workbook
9. Your 4-week plan

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

When desire fades

Libido drops for a thousand reasons — fatigue, mental load, stress, hormones, routine, personal history — and that's neither abnormal nor permanent.

This guide helps you understand what dims your desire, reconnect with what turns you on, and reawaken it — without pressure. Desire isn't only about hormones: it's cultivated.

Your intention

What changed in your desire, and since when: _____

The 4 approaches

This guide works your topic through 4 complementary psychology lenses. Read, do the exercises, fill the workbook — at your own pace.

Psychodynamic — understand the root.

CBT — ease the negative thoughts.

Humanistic — reconcile with yourself.

Systemic — act on your environment.

What dims desire

Mental load, fatigue, stress, sliding into the daily 'manager' role, your relationship to your body, sometimes a history or upbringing: desire rarely fades 'for no reason'.

Understanding what weighs shows you where to act.

Example

Drained by mental load, Camille thought her desire was 'dead'. By easing what she carried, the wanting returned.

What weighs

What in your life most dims your desire (fatigue, load, stress, body...)?

Not 'broken'

Write: 'My desire responds to what I live — it's not broken.'

→ My desire responds to what I live — it's not broken.

The thoughts that block

'I should want it', 'it's not normal to lose interest', 'I'm broken': these thoughts add pressure, which dims desire even more.

Understanding responsive desire (which comes after you set the context) changes everything.

Example

Sure she had to 'wait for the urge', Nia never set the context. Understanding responsive desire freed her.

My thoughts

Note: a thought that pressures you · a gentler version.

Spontaneous vs responsive

What sets the scene for you (relaxation, context, closeness)? How to create more?

→ Desire often comes after the context — not before.

Reconnecting with your own desire

Your desire is yours: what turns you on, your relationship to your body, allowing yourself pleasure as a legitimate part of your life. Not a duty, not an obligation.

Reconnecting with yourself often precedes the return of wanting.

Example

By taking time for herself, without pressure, Léa found a part of herself... and desire.

What turns me on

Write what feeds your desire (context, sensations, imagination, closeness).

Allowing myself

A small permission of pleasure to grant yourself this week: _____

→ My desire is mine — I have the right to cultivate it.

Reawakening concretely

Concretely: ease the mental load (the first brake), protect your rest, tend to context and closeness, explore without pressure. And if the drop is lasting or distressing, a medical/sex-therapy check-up can help (hormones, medication...).

Desire is cultivated like a garden.

Example

By finally sharing the load with her partner and resting, Sofia let her desire breathe.

Ease & create

A load to delegate/ease · a context of closeness to protect.

When to consult

If the drop lasts or distresses you: note the idea of a medical/sex-therapy check-up.

→ Easing my load and setting the context — that's how I reawaken desire.

Practical tips & advice

Tips & advice

- Low libido is common and rarely 'abnormal'.
- Mental load and fatigue are the first brakes on desire.
- Desire is often responsive: it comes after you set the context.
- Reconnect with what turns you on, and ease/share your load.
- Protect your rest and a context of closeness, without pressure.
- If the drop is lasting or distressing, a medical/sex-therapy check-up can help.

To fill in

What dims / reawakens

What dims	What reawakens

My context

Load to ease	Closeness to create

PLAN

Your 4-week plan

Week 1 — Understand what dims my desire.

Week 2 — Release the pressure (responsive desire).

Week 3 — Reconnect with what turns me on.

Week 4 — Ease my load & set the context.

Your plan in 3 lines

- What most dims my desire:
- What reawakens it:
- The load I ease:

TO CLOSE

Your libido isn't broken — it's cultivated.

Your libido isn't broken — it's cultivated.

Adults only (18+). This guide is a coaching and psychoeducation tool for intimate wellbeing — not therapy, nor medical or sex-therapy advice. In case of pain, persistent difficulty or distress, consult a sex therapist or doctor. © PerfectMatch · EvaTalk.