TO BEGIN

A slow, conscious and connected sexuality

Tantra, in its modern sensual form, offers a slow, present and connected sexuality: it favors breath, presence and connection over performance or the 'race to orgasm'.

This guide introduces it simply, to deepen your pleasure and connection, alone or together.

YOUR INTENTION

What attracts you about a slower, more present sexuality: _____

Presence rather than performance

Tantra shifts attention from the 'goal' (orgasm) to the path (sensations, breath, connection). It's neither esoteric nor reserved for initiates: it's, above all, presence.

Understanding this removes the idea that you'd have to 'succeed' at anything.

Example

Sarah thought 'it's not for me'; discovering it was mostly about presence, she dared to try.

Demystify

Which idea kept you from tantra that may not be true?

The path, not the goal

Write: 'Pleasure is a path, not a performance.'

Takeaway — Tantra is presence — not performance.

The thoughts that hold you back

'It's too esoteric', 'I won't manage', 'you have to be an expert': these thoughts keep you from trying something actually simple and accessible.

Reframing them opens curiosity.

Example

'I'll feel ridiculous' blocked Nia, until she discovered it all started with... breathing together.

Spot the brake

Note a thought that holds you back · a fairer version.

Accessible

Write: 'It starts simply — with breath and presence.'

Takeaway — Tantra is accessible: it starts with breathing and being present.

Inhabit your body, slow down

Tantra invites you to slow down and fully inhabit your body: feel, breathe, savor, without racing to a goal. It's a gentle way to reconcile with your sensuality.

Allowing yourself slowness and presence is already a gift you give yourself.

Example

By slowing down and focusing on her sensations, Fatou experienced an intensity she hadn't known.

Slow down

What could slowing down and being present bring you?

Inhabit my body

A way to better feel and inhabit your body: _____

Takeaway — Inhabiting your body and slowing down opens a deeper pleasure.

Simple practices to begin

In practice, to begin (solo or together): conscious breathing, shared gazing, slow attentive touch, and letting go of the orgasm 'goal'. No performance, just presence and connection.

Move at your pace, with curiosity rather than an objective.

Example

By starting with five minutes of breathing and shared gazing, Léa and her partner felt a new connection.

My first practice

A simple practice to try this week (breath, gaze, slow touch): _____

No goal

Write: 'We explore presence, without an orgasm objective.'

Takeaway — Breath, gaze, slow touch, presence: that's where it all begins.
